As someone who just had a birthday (and who narrowly avoided being born on the 14th like she was supposed to) I say Happy Birthday to a fellow Aquarius.

Happy birthday from someone whose birthday was last week.

Also: youngster. (me = 59? gah. where have the years gone? *wry*)

Happy birthday, fine Aquarian.

::sends virtual champagne:: If you have to get older, you can at least be happy ;)

I am starting to think my birthday is a cue to the universe to kick in the Interesting Times.

Assuming we're home by next week, can I get a raincheck?

At least it's warm in the Southlands.

Happy birthday! You share it with my brother-in-law. So, it's a good day.

(And why am I unsurprised that you were born on Friday the 13th?)

ace\_cub\_reportr on February 13th, 2009 04:09 pm (UTC)
Actually, that was so long ago that Friday the 13th hadn't been invented yet. So I was born on Friday the 12-and-a-halfth.

(So my sister, who was born on the other side of midnight, always claimed. Convenient: a birthday was the one thing we didn't have to share, and being a day older, she always thought she deserved mine as well as her own.)

Actually, that was so long ago that Friday the 13th hadn't been invented yet.
Hah. You're not that much older than I.

On the other hand, having a twin sister whose birthday differs from your own is quite the impressive feat.

That's like I tell folks I'm older than the rocks that crumbled into the dirt I'm older than.

Happy Birthday!

(Your birthday is very conveniently placed to remind me that I have a friend halfway across the world who's turning 18 tomorrow. I'll have to do something about that.)
